Re: New Anniversary-Day Policy
Date: Today

Effective immediately.

Anniversary Policy Explained: Good news! We think you deserve more, so every year, on the anniversary date of your hire here at (FILL IN THIS BLANK) we will be giving you a small cash bonus. Nothing huge, but enough to create a fun night for you and your family, or to buy yourself that little something you've had your eye on, or for you to take yourself out for lunch.

What's the best part? This money will be coming from your co-workers. On the anniversary of your start date, every co-worker will give you a dollar. Yup, a single greenback. A buck. One hundred cents. And it's yours to keep. (And should they be sick or on vacation, they will give it to you upon their return to work.)

What's the bad news? Glad you asked, 'cause there is some, but just a tiny bit. First, on the anniversary of your start date you will be required to wear our specially created sign proclaiming it to be your anniversary date. Failure to wear the sign will result in your forfeiture of the money mentioned above.

And of course, on each of your co-workers' anniversary dates, they will have to wear the sign. That's good, right? But on those anniversaries, you'll be giving them one of your bucks. You'll pay them. That's ok... but not great.

(Don't sweat it, you cheapskate. By the end of the year you will not have gained or lost anything, but on your anniversary you'll FEEL totally rich. And that's good, right? We know that it isn't as good as actually being rich, but it's so much more obtainable!)

So, please sign this form as your agreement to participate, and you're on your way to feeling rich at least once a year. You don't have to agree, but if you fail to sign this, we will mock you and generally make you feel lousy. And we might hide your desk and everything else here, so don't mess with us. Besides, it's fun. Promise.

Yours,
The Anniversary Committee
